THE WHEELBARROW LOAD

I write this month's load from the couch through a haze of cold medications, which have been singularly unhelpful in relieving the signs of a late-season rhino virus. I really thought I was going to avoid it this year, but the germs caught up with me in perhaps the prettiest time of the whole year, when riding and horse activities are a pleasure. No bugs, sunny, warm but not hot temperatures. Dang it.

I was brewing the thing the day before the spring show, and so I hereby apologize for any mistakes or grumpiness on my part. The show thank goodness ran like it was on rails, with no drama and only friendly happy people. Our judge, Elise Mann was easy going and charming, and our dedicated volunteers made my life as comfortable as it could be considering my head was one giant ball of snot.

The last few years the spring show has been relatively small, but I think it still serves a vital purpose in this area. We just don't have enough low level shows that can welcome newcomers to the sport. As long as we can afford it, I feel we should keep offering it, even if entries are not what we would ideally like. There are always some first-timers showing, and the Jockey Club-sponsored TIP awards continue to bring in a steady stream of Thoroughbreds. And for TB lovers like myself, it was particularly gratifying to see that all of the TIP award winners this year were also the High Score winners in their respective divisions! Go baby go!

This issue is jam-packed with information about up coming shows and clinics, and I find I have run out of room to discuss our last CDCTA meeting, which was graciously hosted by Liz Hotchkiss at Stony Hill Farm on March 19. About fifteen members and guests gathered in the upper barn to watch former CDCTA President Dr. Janet Rettenmaier present a program on sport horse rehabilitation therapies. Dr. Rettenmaier originally specialized in small animal surgery, but she has since decided to follow her heart and focus her considerable veterinary talents on the maintenance and repair of common sport horse performance injuries. The bulk of her clientele is active competitors, and she meets up with them at big shows and events throughout the Midwest.

Dr. Rettenmaier brought along several of her very cool therapeutic devices, including an electromagnetic hoop that looked like voodoo magic until she offered to let us feel the electric field by "backing" into the device: wow, it was like grabbing that electric fence times ten! Most of us did not like the sensation, but when the hoop is waved over the lower extremities of a horse, it apparently does not bother them at all. She also brought out the acupuncture needles and invited us to "twirl" one of the tiny things into our hands. Not as many people participated in that one, but despite my needle-phobia, I did what she said. Not painless, but not really painful either. Most horses don't mind it and often come to appreciate it, standing quietly and sometimes falling asleep despite looking like very odd porcupines.

The big hit of the seminar was a sturdy metal platform that looked a lot like a walk-on scale when its various panels were connected. Janet then offered us a chance to stand on he thing, and turned on the juice. The sensation is pleasant, and brought to mind those old fat-burner machines from the fifties that you strapped around your hips in order to jiggle your way to thinness. Everyone who tried it thought it was great, and started scheming to get their own horses jiggled. The primary use for this device is for horses that cannot handle the jarring of other types of rehab, but that needs to increase muscle tone throughout the body due to extended stall rest. But really, is a horse going to voluntarily get on that thing?

Turns out the answer is yes. Kim Krieckhaus brought her elderly Mustang mare, MJ, who is a much-loved schoolmaster for young riders. The last few years have brought some back issues, and MJ has some chronic pain. After some initial snorting and eye-rolling by MJ, Kim and Janet convinced the mare to step on the platform, and turned it on. You could see MJ thinking, "What the..." and then relaxing into her jiggle session. She stayed on for twenty minutes, the recommended time, and with each moment she seemed happier and more comfortable. When Janet turned off the machine, MJ seemed to come almost out of a trance, and was visibly improved.

I know I learned a lot from the presentation, and everyone else seemed to have a great time too. If you would like more information, or schedule a consultation for your horse, we will have contact information for Janet in next month's newsletter.

Until next time-

Beth Hussey
