JULY 2016

THE WHEELBARROW LOAD

“God willin’ and the creek don’t rise...”

It’s a saying that I heard growing up a lot, more or less self-mockingly from my mom, who was anything but a country bumpkin. But everybody who lives on a farm prefaces any question about their future plans with some form of “we will be there if...” and from there it can be just about anything. Did the horses get out that day? Then we’re fixing fence. Did one of them go lame? Then we’re waiting anxiously for news from the vet, or soaking feet in Epsom salt booties. Is the hay ready, like, right now? Then we’re loading hay.

Well, the creek rose this past holiday weekend. Everyone who knows Cosmic Oaks Farms knows that it is a bit of a boggy place. Our business card reads, a little too grandly perhaps, “Quality Sport Horses” but really it should boast World’s Most Vigorous Mosquitoes. On the plus side, though, we are criss-crossed by three watercourses, and the combination of flowing water and the number three is supposed to be the ultimate Feng Shui.

The low ground and heavy tree cover protects us from some of the harsher vagaries of the mid-Missouri weather. Tornadoes are not much of a worry, and we have good windbreaks but a lot of rain in a short period of time can overwhelm the drainage capacity of our water-threaded pastures. Six inches in thirty-six hours definitely qualifies as a lot of rain, and as I tossed and turned Saturday night in bed while thunder crashed and lightning blazed I wondered what scene of devastation awaited me in the morning.

Water in the basement, first. Soggy basement carpet is a minor disaster but one that can be fixed. I sighed and headed out to the barn but—wait a minute—where’s the bridge? Pretty large river flowing through the backyard pasture. I look downstream and there it is, hung up in some branches at a bend in the ditch. Plan B is walking down the driveway to the barn, so I set off that way and oh no! the culvert over the runoff creek is cavitating and washed out. I wasn’t sure it would hold up under my weight, much less allow safe passage of large equines, pick up trucks or horse trailers.

And so once again the best-laid plans of horse people are revamped and redirected. Finances will not allow much in the way of showing or clinics for the rest of this year, now that I have some major road repair to do. Did you know, by the way, that road structures are NEVER covered in your homeowner’s policy? I do now. Even low-cost excursions to local barns for Wolfie re-education purposes are off the table for now, at least until we can get the road fixed and safe for trailer passage.

Instead, we will continue with our Natural Horsemanship exercises. Progress is steady and rewarding, and today Wolfie showed us that his new-found bravery with plastic bags extended to other scary items by walking, and then trotting, calmly over a silver tarp lying in the arena. We then picked it up and draped it over him, and he had no problem with that either. When it slipped off of him in a giant shiny clump he reacted a bit sharply, but after repeating the advance/retreat exercise, we plopped it on his back again and let it slip off after a few circuits. This time he calmly stepped over the fallen tarp like a supermodel stepping out of a slinky cocktail dress.

Before we started the final exercise of the day, Melanie asked me if Wolfie was food-motivated. Since there is no horse more motivated by food than Wolfie, I said, yes, I thought probably so, and she instructed me to place apple horse treats on the surface of several jump blocks and plastic lawn chairs in order to entice him towards an otherwise scary object. The plan worked amazingly well, with one small snag: my newest farm resident, an eight year old Shepherd cross dog named Zooey (who is also the very definition of food-motivated) was following behind me at a surreptitious distance eating all the treats off the obstacles as soon as I put them down!

I hope the middle of summer finds you in good shape and on firm footing, whether you are showing or not.

Until next time-

Beth Hussey

Pilates for Dressage Clinic with Janice Dulak

www.pilatesfordressage.com

August 5,6,7, 2016 at Fox Run, Columbia, MO

About the Clinic:

Pilates for Dressage^R will systematically and effectively teach riders how to improve their skills with Janice's defined set of principles for riding.

The Clinic begins at 6:00 Friday night, August 5th with Janice Dulak's powerpoint lecture (horseless!) based on her book "Pilates for the Dressage Rider." This provides an excellent introduction to the history and theories of Joseph Pilates which are the foundation for Pilates for Dressage^R. (signed upon request) Janice will define the principles of body awareness and control essential to being an effective rider. This lecture will take place during a Pot-Luck dinner for all participants in Lora's home at Fox Run.

On Saturday and Sunday, 9 to 11 am, Janice will lead participants in Pilates for Dressage^R mat work – exercises specifically selected to find the musculature essential for riding. This two hour class instills the Pilates mat work into Pilates for Dressage^R principles that will guide the rider toward better body use for improved riding. This class will take place in one of the arenas, using tarps and mats. Please bring a personal mat if you own one. If you are hauling in your horse, Fox Run will have a small outside day pen for your horse, you bring hay and water bucket. There will be no overnight stabling for haul-ins.

On Saturday and Sunday, (after our Lunch Break) 12:00-5:45 -Janice will instruct mounted riders in semi-private 45 min. lessons, maximum of 12 riders per day. Riders will now have the challenge of applying what they learned in the morning session while they are in the saddle. The focus of the mounted sessions will include: correcting posture and seat position; learning to affect the horse with the body in halting, half halting; finding a more effective way to post and sit the trot; how to influence correct bend in a horse; and much more!

More than exercise, fitness or conditioning, Janice Dulak's Pilates for Dressage^R will change the way you ride for harmony and partnership like you have never experienced! Come join us for an educational and fun-filled weekend!

Cost:

* Entire workshop cost - $250 (includes Fri. lecture/pot-luck, Sat. mat work and mounted lesson and Sun. mat work and mounted lesson!)

* Participating Auditor cost - $75 (includes Fri. lecture/pot-luck, participating in Sat. and Sun. morning mat work, and observe/audit rides)

* Auditor only cost - $50 (includes Fri. lecture/pot-luck, observe Sat. and Sunday mat work and observe/audit Sat. and Sun. rides)

Important Stuff: Clinic will first be filled with "Entire Workshop – Both Days" participants. But later, if openings, may consider Saturday only for those who absolutely need.

Auditors may want to bring a chair, mine are rotting.....

No outside dogs, I have plenty. No overnight stabling, I have plenty of that too. But we will find an outside pen or stall for your horse so you can watch!

Bring a side dish to share Fri. night, bring your own lunch for Sat. and Sun., and a mat if you own one (Lora will have some). Details later. And of course your tack room sink, and your horse, don't forget your horse.

All registrations must be received by July 20. Signed release, this registration form, current neg. coggins copy, and check payable to Fox Run. Send to Lora Blair, 2910 W. Akeman Bridge Rd., Columbia, MO 65202
